New Farandnear Visitor Center Debuts

Farandnear – the 89-acre former estate of the Goodspeed-Banks family in Shirley, MA – was formally opened to the public two years ago. This fall, The Trustees' master plan for the property – which envisions a vibrant community park and public garden for personal and family nature exploration, recreation, learning, and relaxation – takes a giant leap forward with the opening of a new visitor center pavilion and accompanying parking area.

Located on the site of the property's original house, the pavilion provides the hub from which Farandnear's trails can be accessed. With a view of the property's western vista, the pavilion is designed to be an open, welcoming structure, featuring property maps and space for educational and community programs. An interactive nature wall provides hands-on activities to spark curiosity and lead visitors of all ages to follow nature-oriented adventures out on the land. The pavilion also features a grand hearth – built on the site of the family's original chimney – providing a welcoming gathering place and connection to Farandnear's origins.

Come and experience Farandnear for yourself! A free family-oriented Dedication and Fall Fest event is Saturday, October 10, at 11am, to which all are invited. For details, visit Things To Do on our website, thetrustees.org.

Brand Refreshed, Renewed

In this issue of Special Places, we introduce the new look and feel of The Trustees' refreshed brand. This change was the result of more than 16 months of work focused on understanding how audiences today experience and know the organization. We also sought to understand where most of our visitors get their information, how they plan their visits, and the value of the brand equity we have established over the last 124 years. Working with design and branding expert Mark Minelli (who also created the last iteration of the brand in 2005) we refreshed our mark and moved toward using the name that most already use – The Trustees – in our printed and digital communications. We also created a simpler and mobile-friendly mark to include both the name and a reference to our connection to nature.

In our new approach to photography, digital communications, and marketing we want to reflect the personal way in which most of our users experience the organization. You'll see here and in other new materials that we are adopting a new color palette that is inspired by the vibrant hues found in sunsets, fresh vegetables, and throughout nature, as well as a simpler and cleaner design to allow the beauty of our special places to tell our story.

Room to Grow

More than any other season, autumn signals change—as we quite literally watch the landscape transform from lush green to fiery reds and oranges, brilliant yellows, and burgundies, and we feel the cool air blowing through. Summer's memories populate our heads, hearts, and social media pages. In fall's waning days we find a time to reflect on all that we experienced—the awe of the perfect beach sunset, the appreciation for new hikes conquered, and the inspiration to start planning next year's excursions. I hope your summer was filled with Trustees days.

You might have noticed that we now offering many more public programs and have significantly increased our offerings for families who want to spend more time together and outside. This is intentional and has been a huge investment and priority for the organization. Please tell us how we're doing and what your experience has been at one of our new programs.

Our efforts to protect and conserve special places continue apace. In Dover, we are now in an earnest effort to expand our Pegan Hill Reservation. Thanks to a collaborative and cooperative effort with the Dover and Natick Land Trusts, we are in the final stages of fundraising in order to add to 40 more acres to saved land in those neighborhoods. In Roxbury, our renovation of the Lucerne-Balsam Community Garden has doubled the plots available to local gardeners. We have improved the soil quality, thanks to a collaboration with the School of Public Health at Boston University, and will now be able to provide an additional 3,600 lbs. of fresh, healthy, and affordable food each year to local residents. And on Martha's Vineyard, our agreement with The Farm Institute to integrate their programming into the Trustees family continues to move forward. Thanks to donors and friends who believe in our mission, we are nearing our fundraising goals to complete this idea.

All of these efforts intend to grow our portfolio and to grow our reach, to make more conservationists. We seek to be better known because we want more people to know what we do, what we care about, and what they can do in their lives to help. Our brand refresh was driven by these simple ideas. You hold in your hands one embodiment of that refresh effort. More to come.

I had the privilege of speaking to the International National Trusts Organisation in September. What an honor to see so many struggling in the same purpose—to make the world better for future generations. It never stops surprising me when I discover that The Trustees is better known overseas in the conservation world than in our own backyard at times. We strive to compete above the noise, and all that we do today will have a ripple in that work now and years to come. Join me in a farm dinner, a children's class, a membership campaign, or a conservation effort. All of it matters and your joining us matters.

Autumn MAGIC

BY MATT HEID

Revel in fall's grand palette across our state

Fall foliage in Massachusetts sweeps from the Berkshires to the sea in a kaleidoscopic display of forest wonder. It is a display of nature's majesty unlike any other in New England—and an array of Trustees properties invite you to revel in it to the fullest.

The state's wide range of terrain, elevations, and ecosystems provides habitat for a remarkable diversity of tree and forest species, with an exceptional fall color palette to match. What's more, the progression of peak foliage across the state spans nearly a month—longer than most other regions of New England. From late September until October's end, colors await somewhere in the state, to renew our spirit and fuel our imagination.

The Berkshires: Where Fall Foliage Begins

Cool air and fall weather come soonest to the high elevations of the Berkshires, making it an ideal destination from the last days of September through mid-October. Experience the region at its best from atop Hurlburt's Hill in Bartholomew's Cobble in Sheffield, where a sweeping view encompasses the silver maple-lined Housatonic River Valley to the north and foliage-cloaked hills to the east. "The rich soils and floodplain support an unparalleled diversity of trees and plants," explains Russell Hopping, Ecology Program Director for The Trustees. "It's a National Natural Landmark for this very reason."

A different, yet equally beautiful, foray into fall can be found in Tyringham's Ashintully Gardens, notes Josh Knox, Superintendent of the Pioneer and Quaboag Valleys. "A trip to Ashintully offers an intimate garden experience with sweeping lawns, a dramatic fountain, stone walls, and open fields," he explains. A short hike leads uphill to the remains of the property's original mansion, where a color-rich vista awaits of pastoral Tyringham Valley and the surrounding rumples of the Berkshire Hills. Also in Tyringham are McLennan Reservation, which offers a varied and foliage-bright landscape of hills and wetlands; and Tyringham Cobble, which rewards with colorful valley views from its namesake promontory.

The Pioneer Valley: Fall Settles In

As autumn marches on, colors descend from the Berkshire highlands and into the broad valley of the Connecticut River, where foliage peaks from the first through third weeks of October. You can survey a vast swath of the region's fall landscape from atop Peaked Mountain in Monson, where the view stretches from the forests of northern Connecticut to the distant peaks of southern New Hampshire and Vermont, all set ablaze in a riot of fall color. "The 1,227-foot summit reveals spectacular views of undisturbed rural and forested landscapes in every direction," enthuses Knox.

Bullitt Reservation in Ashfield is another tempting option, where forests, fields, and wetlands mix to paint the landscape in a rainbow of leaves. Other excellent options in the region include the William Cullen Bryant Homestead in Cummington, reached via color-spectacular Route 112 (a National Scenic Byway); and North Common Meadow in Petersham, gateway to an extensive collection of protected – and autumn wonderful – forest lands.

Eastern Massachusetts: Where Fall Colors End

Fall foliage cascades toward its final show in eastern Massachusetts. Leaf-peeping opportunities typically peak during the second and third weeks of October, with some spots holding their color well into the latter half of the month, especially in the milder climate of southeast Massachusetts and in destinations close to the Boston area (see sidebar).

Climb to the open, grassy summit of Holt Hill in Andover's Ward Reservation and savor a vast expanse of fall from the highest point in Essex County—the view stretches to the Boston skyline nearly 30 miles away. Loop back to the trailhead along the hill's lower flanks, where enriched soils nourish a vibrant profusion of shagbark hickory, ash, and maple trees. A pastoral scene provides the foliage backdrop for a visit to Appleton Farms in Hamilton, one of the oldest continuously operating farms in America, and a great place for fun family outings. Sugar maples line stone walls near the farm center, while overlooks of tree-studded fields can be had from adjoining Appleton Farms Grass Rides.

Late-season leaf hunters should head to the Allen C. Haskell Public Gardens in New Bedford, where six landscaped acres host a diversity of trees and shrubs with a spectrum of hues – and scents – to match. “Haskell is great for fall color,” notes Ross Moran, Southeast Engagement Manager. “The blooms of the Clerodendron are spectacular at that time of year, and there’s even a Katsura tree that smells like cotton candy.”

Fall is fleeting. Memories are forever. So get out there, live life in full color and revel in nature's grand spectacle. Bright new memories await! 🍁

As the summer heat gives way to crisp days and cooler nights, you might think outdoor activities would be winding down at Trustees properties. But as members and nonmembers alike have been flocking in record numbers to experience the wonder of our reservations this summer, inventive and exciting new events are being planned to welcome you throughout the fall.

"I see the diversity of sites and geographic areas as an opportunity to engage a broader audience," says Kristen Swanberg, Director of Public Programming for The Trustees, noting that the organization is branching out, offering more varied programming than ever before. "You will certainly see more community events, and I'm excited about all the family programs we are offering—it is important to get children out exploring the world around them."

The Trustees is offering programs at properties that haven't typically hosted programs or events in the past to encourage members to explore beyond their local favorites, or even to rediscover a Trustees

Our goal is to give people who come to Trustees properties something fresh and new to experience—we’ve got something for every age.”

Things to do

©S.RYDGREN

Outdoor movie nights, like this recent drive-in at Crane Beach in Ipswich, are family favorites.

celebrates Columbus Day with a fall-themed festival, and at Farandnear in Shirley a Fall Fest and Walk highlights the dedication of the new Visitor Pavilion.

Events for Kids

There is a cornucopia of programming for kids this fall, with something to suit mini-Trustees of all ages. “There are preschool programs and play groups, fairy house building, afterschool programs, night hikes, farm adventures, and cooking classes for kids,” says Swanberg. Itsy Bitsy Explorers allow little ones the chance to explore a working farm and meet animals they’ve only ever seen in books. Preschoolers can enjoy the outdoors at our nature playgroups at Monument Mountain in Great Barrington. Ecosplorations at Weir River Farm in Hingham offers 5-8 year-olds the chance to work hands-on with the animals, hike the trails, and make new friends. And Junior Explorer programs at Norris Reservation in Norwell and the Gov. Oliver Ames Estate in Easton provide kids a unique perspective of these properties and new appreciation for the natural environment.

Halloween Happenings

for the whole family, starting with Haunting Gardens at Naumkeag in Stockbridge. There are pumpkin carvings at the Gov. Oliver Ames Estate in Easton and Francis William Bird Park in Walpole. Norris Reservation in Norwell and Rocky Woods in Medfield feature Halloween-themed evenings full of costumes and things that go bump in the night, and at Allen C. Haskell Public Gardens in New Bedford, Ghosts in the Garden features pumpkins and games for the whole family.

Trustees Kitchens Heat Up

If you’re looking to move inside and warm up, then why not step into one of the three Trustees teaching kitchens. We encourage and support food education through outstanding kitchens at Appleton Farms in Ipswich and Powisset Farm in Dover, and The Trustees is proud to be the programming partner for the KITCHEN at the new Boston Public Market. Daily lectures and demonstrations, as well as hands-on classes and wellness events are now available throughout the year.

More than 700 events are being offered at Trustees properties over the next few months, allowing visitors the chance to explore and discover nature, history, food, and more in new ways, and to discover new Trustees properties, in many cases for the very first

Our goal is to give people who come to Trustees properties something fresh and new to experience—we’ve got something for every age.

Sustainability

Helpful ideas to be more green this holiday season

BY JACI CONRY

For most people, the holiday season is frenzied. With all the shopping, decorating, gift-wrapping, card writing, and cooking to be done there doesn't seem to be much time to consider sustainability. But the holiday season is actually one of the most important times of the year to focus on what we can do to be more environmentally conscious.

You'll conserve energy by stringing your Christmas tree with LED lights, which use 90% less energy than incandescent bulbs and can last up to 100,000 hours. "There are many small things you can do to be more sustainable," says Jim Younger, Director of Structural Resources for The Trustees. "Simply changing your light bulbs to more efficient LED lights goes a long way to lowering your energy bill." Younger notes, "Sustainability is one of The Trustees' core values. We've done energy audits on our buildings and replaced outdated furnaces or switched from oil to more energy efficient gas heat." As winter approaches, Younger also recommends people do energy audits at home through Mass Save®.

"We have a high standard of ecological stewardship on our properties," explains Ramona Latham, Adult Learning Programming Manager for The Trustees' Northeast Region. "In our gardens we avoid toxins and use native species. You can do this at home." During the holidays, rather than selecting a pre-cut Christmas tree, you can buy a balled and burlapped tree that can be planted outdoors after the holiday season is over.

"Sustainability is all about choices," says Younger. "You want to make choices that have the greatest benefit." When it comes to gift buying, he recommends purchasing things that are locally made. Consider gifts that support your community and generate minimal waste.

This may include theater or performance tickets, charitable donations, or gift certificates. "Giving the gift of a Trustees membership is a great idea—it promotes getting outdoors and respecting nature," says Younger [see sidebar]. Another idea is to give the gift of your time like volunteering for a charitable organization in lieu of a gift.

Festive parties and large family meals are abundant during the holidays. Support local businesses, farms, wineries, and breweries by shopping locally for ingredients. "Think about where your food is being produced," says Latham. "Avoid buying food that travels a long way to get to you which results in significant carbon emissions. Stock up on fresh, locally

EASY AND FUN HOLIDAY PROJECTS

Gift Bags

Wrap a worn gift bag with newspaper for a fresh, elegant look. Or cut the end off an old shoe box or shipping carton and wrap with recycled paper of your choice.

Wine Cork Wreath

Have a bunch of wine corks in a drawer for a "future project"? Now's your chance to use them; using an old wreath frame as the base, just glue the corks together in a pattern of your choice to create a unique wreath like this one.

Menorah

Glue or tie clothespins together, alternating the open end up and down. Insert extra unused birthday candles in the upward facing clips, and voila — a one-of-a-kind menorah!

grown foods when available.” Shop at places like Boston Public Market, the new year-round, indoor market featuring fresh, locally sourced food from throughout Massachusetts and New England.

Get creative when it comes to packaging gifts or decorating. Traditional wrapping paper is by far the easiest option, but it results in an enormous amount of waste. “We have to get away from all the piles of trash we are creating,” says Latham. Consider packaging gifts in reusable materials like baskets or bags; wrap items in brown paper decorated in glitter, newspaper, old maps or sheet music, or reuse old wrapping paper. A quick Pinterest search will give you hundreds of great ideas, like decorating your packages with natural material such as a sprig of pine or a dried flower, or using a broken piece of jewelry. You can even create gift bags out of cereal boxes; just cut off the top and punch holes for handles made out of ribbon or twine.

With a dash of creativity, a dollop of advanced planning, and your choice of these green “seasonings,” you’ll have a handy recipe for holiday savings of the sustainable kind. What better present than a gift for our environment this holiday season? ■

Ann ANTONELLIS

At Home on the Farm

©M.GARDNER

"Part of me has always dreamed of living a more rural lifestyle," says volunteer Ann Antonellis. "Physical work is in my blood and I relish getting out of the city. Nature is such good medicine." For a professional book conservation technician at Harvard Library, time spent on the farm has allowed Ann to tap into a deep reservoir of personal energy, rooted both in her sense of self and an intrepid alter ego. Ann's official volunteer title isn't quite "farmer," but she is an Assistant Wrangler and devotes nearly a full day every weekend to caring for, moving and sometimes chasing after Weir River Farm's twenty-six cows, assorted pigs and other livestock.

"Ann has volunteered at the farm almost every weekend," says South Shore Superintendent for The Trustees Ed Pitcavage. "She has done a lot of work with the livestock, fencing, the CSA, and building projects. And check out her Facebook page—she has documented all her activities on the farm for the past year!" Steve Viera, The Trustees' Park & Conservation Technician for the Southeast Region adds, "Ann has made hectic weekends double booked with Open Barnyard and World's End volunteer projects a breeze by taking care of the morning and afternoon feedings and assisting in literally any project available. Her over-the-top effort hit home when I recently found her feeding the entire barnyard at 7am during an absolute downpour. She is one of a kind and a real gem."

It is for her exemplary effort and tireless dedication to Weir River Farm in Hingham that The Trustees are thrilled to honor Ann as Volunteer of the Year for 2015.

"Ann has volunteered at the farm, for eight hours on both Saturdays and Sundays almost every weekend."

Cultural Phenom

With an expansive background in development for art and culture, historic preservation and environmental stewardship, Director of Leadership Giving and The Trustees' 2015 Employee of the Year Denise Trapani couldn't be more perfectly suited to drive our Cultural Resources Campaign. And if you ask Denise, the feeling is mutual. "I am energized daily by the vision and expertise of the team," she says. "I feel like I am in a graduate seminar every day, which I love!"

The success of the campaign to date, as well as such upcoming projects as the Art and the Landscape initiative, are due to Denise's tireless efforts and dedication to The Trustees' mission. "Our supporters greatly gratify me with their wonderful generosity," says Trapani. "Adding this award to a situation where I am always excited and motivated to contribute is really humbling. I am honored and grateful."
